The 3 Bait Question Scripts

Use these verbatim, or adapt the pattern. The goal is the same: a question only your family can answer that a voice clone — no matter how good — cannot.

Script 1 — The “Family Memory” Bait

“Okay, before we talk money — quick check. What did we eat at Grandma’s 80th birthday?”

Why it works: The answer is a shared memory, never posted online, and the clone has zero access to it. A real relative answers in one second. A clone stalls, guesses, or deflects.

Variations: - “What was the name of the place we went for Dad’s retirement?” - “Who caught the fish on the lake trip in 2019?” - “What song did we dance to at your wedding?”

Script 2 — The “Inside Joke” Bait

“Hold on — you remember the thing with the ferry? What happened?”

Why it works: Inside jokes are the ultimate private data. They’re never written down, never posted, and completely unpredictable. The clone cannot even identify what you’re referring to.

Variations: - “Remember Uncle Roy’s hat? What color was it?” - “What did we name the raccoon that lived in the shed?” - “You still owe me from the bet at the cabin. What was it about?”

Script 3 — The “Mutual Context” Bait (for business)

“Before I touch that wire — which vendor was the one with the invoice problem last quarter? And what’s my extension?”

Why it works: Business scams rely on the caller (the “CEO”) being the one with all the context. Flipping it — requiring the caller to prove knowledge only the real person has — breaks the script instantly.

Variations: - “What’s the name of the project we killed in March?” - “Which client did we lose the contract to last year?” - “What code word did we agree on for urgent requests?”

The 3 Rules of Bait Questions

1. Ask FIRST, pay later. Verification happens before any information about the emergency is shared — never after.
 2. Never verify with the caller’s facts. If the caller says “I’m at St. Mary’s Hospital,” do NOT ask “which hospital are you at?” — they’ll repeat it. Ask something they couldn’t know.
 3. One wrong answer = fail. No second chances, no “oh I meant the other one.” The moment the answer is wrong, the call is a scam. Hang up.

The 30-Second Drill

Practice this exchange until it’s automatic:

Caller: “Mom, it’s me, I’m in trouble, I need money!” You:
“What’s the word?” Caller: “What? Mom, there’s no time!” You:
“What did we eat at Grandma’s 80th?” Caller: “I don’t remember, please!” You: “Then you’re not my [son/daughter].
Goodbye.” (click — then post in the family group)
